

Contents

1	Definitions of Terms	1
	A Model for a Science of Clinical Psychology	2
	Two Different Origins: Same Conclusion	4
	Clinical Experience	5
	Philosophy of Science	6
	An Example of Abstraction and Generality	10
	Research to Support Concreteness and Specificity	11
	Recent Contributions About the Role of Abstraction	23
	Conclusion	24
2	The Future Is Now: Online Interventions
	Are Here to Stay and Grow	25
	Historical Background	27
	The Contribution of Hertlein and Blumer	28
	Feedback in Psychotherapy	30
	Why Online Practice Can Be Harmful	32
	Why Online Practice can be Harmful: —Part III	32
	How Can So Many Professionals Ignore the Basics?	33
	Regulatory Boards	34
	Professional Associations	34
	Leadership Possibilities	35
	Other Options	35
	Conclusion	36
3	Verifiability in Clinical Psychology Practices	37
	The Requirements of Verifiability in Clinical Psychological Practices.....	40
	The Meaning of Evidence in Clinical Psychology: Concreteness and Specificity in Psychological Evaluation	41
	Test Evidence	43
	The Artist/Empiricist Distinction in Clinical Psychology: Counseling, Psychotherapy, and Psychoanalysis	45
	The Importance of an Initial Baseline to Evaluate Progress.....	52

The Importance of Follow-Up in Clinical Psychology Practices	53
Importance of Assigning Homework in Psychological Interventions	54
Conclusion	56
4 Present Status and Future Perspectives for Personality and Family Assessment	59
Conclusion	61
5 Practice Without Theory	63
The Structured/Unstructured Continuum in Clinical Psychology Practices	67
Degrees of Structure	68
Semistructured Programs	68
Conclusions	71
6 Beyond Systems Thinking: Toward a Unifying Framework for Human Relationships	73
What Is the Shape of a System?	74
What Is a Paradigm, a Theory, a Model, and a Dimension?	74
Metatheoretical	76
Operational	77
Theories	77
Models	79
Dimensions	79
Implications for Theory Construction	81
Requirements for a Unifying Framework of Human Relationships	84
Requirements for a Paradigm	84
Requirements for a Theory	85
Requirements for a Model	86
Requirements for a Dimension	87
Applications of Extremes in Specificity and Concreteness	88
Conclusion	89
7 Combining Theory with Practice	91
Meta-theoretical Assumptions	94
Interrelatedness of Relational Competence Theory Models	96
Theoretical Assumptions	96
Developmental and Normative Models	97
Clinically Relevant Models	101
Conclusion	104

8	Workbooks: Programmed Interactive Practice Exercises and Prescriptions	105
	Theory-Derived Workbooks	107
	The Nature of Workbooks	108
	Programmed	108
	Practice	110
	Exercises	110
	Workbooks for Preventive and Health Promotional Lifelong Learning	113
	Workbooks for Psychiatric Classification	113
	Workbooks from Research with Single- or Multiple-Score Tests	114
	Research Results	117
	Replicable Theory-Derived Interactive Practice Exercises and Prescriptions	118
	Applications in the Laboratory	118
	Crisis Intervention or Psychotherapy: Prescribed Therapeutic Tasks	118
	Intimacy (Model ¹⁵): This Model Is Evaluated in Therapy with Two Tasks	119
	Conclusion	120
9	Conclusion: Implications for Evaluation, Therapy, and Training	123
	Evaluation	123
	Therapy and Training	123
	Appendices	125
	References	332
	Index	351